See Spot Live Longer By Steve Brown Reviewed By Don James OK, I'll admit it. I'm a food bigot; a dog food bigot that is. Since I became seriously involved in the world of dogs. I've become very interested in the subject of food. As a responsible owner of 2 Leonberger show dogs, I realized early on that a dog (any dog) is only going to be as good as the food you put into him. Of course, having a large breed which tends to live a shorter life than smaller dogs, I was interested in delving into the notion that the quality of what we're feeding can have a monumental effect on that longevity. So, I spent time researching raw diets, looking at premium and super premium kibbles, learned how to read and interpret labels and all about AAFCO. I subscribed to periodicals which spent many of their pages talking on the subject of food. Of course, through that study, I learned that the major pet food manufacturers absolutely do not have the health of our dogs in their best interests. Yup, I thought I was doing pretty well, thought I was getting a pretty good handle on all this stuff. Then I met Steve Brown. That was when I realized just how far I needed to go to get even half the handle on this dog food thing that I thought I had. I was invited to attend one of Steve's "See Spot Live Longer" seminars. The seminar is based on his book of the same name and is a synthesis of what he's learned through the years as an owner and developer of premium frozen raw food products in the Northwestern part of the United States. Here's just one example of something I learned by attending the seminar and reading the book I know that dogs do not need carbs.
